

This Girl, Who Was Mocked for Her Bold Brows, Just Got the Best Revenge

After years of being bullied for her unique feature, this 17-year-old landed a major modeling contract.

By Michelle Gant Nov 16, 2016

The best way to shut down haters is to have the right attitude and...become a model. 17-year-old Natalia Castellar hasn't always appreciated her gorgeous bold brows. As a child, she was picked on constantly. "When I was younger they were all anyone would point out. I was bullied terribly because of how thick and long they were, so I wanted to shave them down," Natalia said.

The teen did her best to ignore the bullying and managed to gain an impressive social media following. This garnered the attention of top modeling agency, NEXT Management, where she signed a contract.

Since signing on with the modeling agency, Natalia has posed for some major names, including NARS and Mansur Gavriel. Despite her success, she still gets nasty comments about her brows, but Natalia said she doesn't respond because that's what the trolls want.

She has come to appreciate her dark, thick brows and is more confident about her looks. She said she doesn't even care if they stay trendy or not because she has learned to love them. "They're my trademark, and I wish I would have embraced them sooner," Natalia said.

From: Bored Panda